HOLY WEEK COLLECTIONS

During Holy Week, we have two traditional collections that require explanation.

On Holy Thursday, the entire collection at the evening Mass is transferred to our parish St. Vincent de Paul Society, which provides much assistance to the poor and needy who come our way. This seems fitting because the rite of foot washing, which occurs at Mass, is meant to foster the spirit of charity toward others. The ritual without the deeds of mercy seems quite empty. Hence, the collection allows each person to heed the Lord's command to imitate His act of personal service.

The collection received on Good Friday at the Solemn Liturgy of the Passion and Stations of the Cross goes to support the ancient Christian shrines in the Holy Land. A portion also supports the small and endangered Christian community that bravely resides in that region of the world. This custom of supporting the shrines is a longstanding practice in the Catholic Church.

On Easter Sunday and at the Easter Vigil we have our standard weekly collection. In the spirit of Easter joy, many people use this occasion to support St. Patrick's Parish with a very generous gift that exceeds their ordinary weekly contribution. The Easter Collection always helps us move toward a balanced budget. If you regularly use envelopes, please use the Easter envelope in your packet.

Thank you!

The spiritual danger of insults

As much as we value politeness, we must also acknowledge our own secret appetite for insults. Recall the popularity of comedians like Don Rickles, Phyllis Diller, and Moe Howard of the Three Stooges. Each was a master of stinging put downs, rebukes, and name calling. For sure, they all gave us a "bad example," but many enjoyed them and wrote off their rude antics as "just having fun." More important, we understood that such behavior was never to be imitated.

Today, things have changed drastically. Rudeness and insults have become acceptable, indeed virtually obligatory in public discourse. Because these very bad practices pervade the public square, we gradually accept -- and enjoy -- them as normal. Some good people even defend them as "fighting fire with fire." Others dismiss them as "just words," really harmless. But are they?

Insults are sins. In certain cases, they are serious sins. How so? Insults deliberately strip the target of his or her human dignity -- or at least ignore it. People who habitually insult others erode the "culture of life." This happens by reducing one's favorite enemies to mere objects, "things" marked by stupidity, malevolence, ugliness, or "otherness" (religion, race, ethnicity, and so forth). Once a person is dehumanized, he or she easily becomes an acceptable target for harm, much like an unborn child who is nothing more than a "product of conception."

Insults reveal a great deal about a person's "interior life." They manifest the person's pride, self-absorption and belief in one's own innate superiority over other people. Or perhaps they reflect a person's sad sense of inferiority which can be "healed" only by cutting down other people. In either case, great danger lurks beneath insulting words, even when made in jest or for the sake of spectacle.

We should never minimize the spiritual damage done by deliberate insults. St. Ignatius of Loyola made this point strongly in The Constitutions, which he began writing in 1547. He exhorted the early Jesuits "to keep their souls in peace and tranquility" by always speaking in a "considerate and edifying" manner. He insisted that every Jesuit "value all others from the heart as superior to himself, and outwardly show them the respect and reverence due to each person's position with mildness and simplicity."

The norms espoused by St. Ignatius apply to every self-proclaimed Christian, not just Jesuits. By constantly listening to the fury, bombast, and insults that flow through the media, we can easily forget -- and eventually reject -- the Christian standards of speech about other people. Perhaps the two weeks of Passiontide, which begin this Sunday, are a good time to turn down the volume and recall the silence of the Lord as he stood before Pilate.

Fr. Michael Kerper
