The Holy Spirit: Warm and Cool

On Pentecost, which ends the 50-day Easter Season, the Church focuses our gaze on the Holy Spirit. Usually we visualize the Holy Spirit as a puny little dove, fluttering here and there. However, Sacred Scripture has other more powerful images -- fire, wind, drink, and breath. Jesus himself prefers the image of breath.

In the gospel of St. John, the evangelist recalls the appearance of the Risen Christ on the first Easter night. Christ enters into the midst of a small band of frightened and confused men. St. John says, "He breathed on them and said, 'Receive the Holy Spirit, whose sins you forgive are forgiven them, whose sins you retain are retained.'" Notice that the Risen Christ does not just speak; he also acts, blowing his breath -- the Spirit -- into the infant church.

How are we to understand this "breath" blown among us?

We find the deeper meaning of the Spirit as "breath" in the ancient hymn we know as the Veni Sancte Spiritus and nicknamed the "Golden Sequence." It was written in Latin in the late 12th or early 13th century by Stephen Langton, the Archbishop of Canterbury. It speaks of the "breath" as doing two seemingly opposite things: cooling down and warming up.

In the Latin, we find two phrases applied to the Holy Spirit that mean "cool down." The first is dulce refrigerium. Here the Holy Spirit is invoked as "Sweet refreshment" or, literally, "sweet recooling." The second phrase is in aestu temperies, which means "coolness against the heat." The "breath" cools off that which is overheated.

At the same time, the hymn speaks of the warmth of the "breath." It says: Fove quod est frigidum, which literally means "warm that which is frozen to death."

The Holy Spirit -- the breath of Christ -- cools down that which is overheated and on the verge of burning up and warms up that which is lifeless, frozen into ice. To put it another way, the Holy Spirit -- the breath of Christ -- is God as the One who brings everything back into proper balance, neither scorching hot nor icy cold. The Holy Spirit -- the breath of Christ -- moderates extremes and restores everything to its proper temperature.

This fascinating image helps us know when the Holy Spirit is absent in the church and in each of us individually.

When the heat of anger, division, animosity toward others, and self-righteousness flairs up like a ferocious flame, we know that the Holy Spirit is not present. When the coldness of religious smugness, unbending positions, and excessive self-contentment freezes the heart, we know that the Holy Spirit is also not present. Only when warmth and coolness exist together do we discover presence of the Holy Spirit

On Pentecost we celebrate the birthday of the Church, which is flooded by the Holy Spirit. We pray today that the universal church and our own parish may never be too hot nor too cold, but always cooled, warmed and sustained in life by the Holy Spirit of God, the Breath of the Risen One.

Fr. Michael Kerper
