“Was incarnate of the Virgin Mary...”

From 1970 until December 2011, the official English version of the Nicene Creed had us say that Jesus “was born of the Virgin Mary.” Using the new version, we now say that Jesus “was incarnate of the Virgin Mary.” Some ask: Why don’t they just leave these things alone? And what’s the difference anyway? Does it really matter what we say? Yes!

When English speakers say that a person was “born” on a particular day, we usually mean that he or she began his or her personal existence upon emerging from the maternal womb. Of course, we believe that our personal existence begins at the moment of conception; however our “public existence” begins upon leaving the womb, which can be pinpointed precisely in terms of date and time. This means that prior to our conception and birth we did not exist at all.

Christ, unlike all other human beings, has eternal existence. Hence, in the Nicene Creed we say that the Son was “born of the Father before all ages, God from God, Light from Light, true God from true God.” These words express the doctrine of the “pre-existence of the Son,” who is also called “the Word.” Though the Creed speaks of the Son being “born” of the Father, it also says “before all ages,” which implies that the Son’s existence, like the Father’s and Spirit’s, is eternal.

In order to affirm the pre-existence of the Son, the Nicene Creed avoids using the word “born” when speaking of Christ’s birth in history as a human being. Instead, the Creed uses the words incarnatus est, which are translated into English as “he was incarnate,” thereby distinguishing His birth from all other human births.

Now, let’s look at the word “incarnate.” This word means “to become enfleshed.” Here we see a crucial difference between Christ and other human beings. Christ – the eternal Son of the Father – has eternal existence. As such, He existed without flesh before He was conceived in the womb of Mary. We, however, do not become “incarnate” because our bodies and souls come into existence simultaneously. Though the human soul is the direct and unique creation of God, the soul does not pre-exist without a body. By contrast, Christ did pre-exist without a body.

Please remember that Christ has always existed in His divine nature, but not in His human nature, which began only when He was conceived within the womb of the Virgin Mary. Hence, when we speak of the “birth of Christ,” we refer to the emergence of His human nature within time. This brings us to another key doctrine: Christ is a Divine Person who has a divine nature and a human nature, which were united – and remain so forever – at the moment of the Incarnation, i.e. His conception within the Virgin Mary. Christ, then, is not “half God” and “half Man.” He is fully divine and fully human. In light of this, we never refer to Jesus as a human “person” but as a human “being.” This difference is very important.

To make things a little more murky, it is indeed true that the Apostles' Creed, which everyone knows, states that Christ “was born of the Virgin Mary.” That translation remains unchanged because the Latin says, “natus ex Maria Virgine.” The Nicene Creed has “incarnatus est” – “was incarnate.” This reflects the Church’s strong desire in the 4th Century to stress the pre-existence of Christ, an issue that did not occupy those who formulated the Apostles’ Creed.
